		The program began with an inaugural session led by dignitaries, setting a positive tone for the day. The first session, facilitated by Ms. Varsha Pai (Assistant Manager, KPMG) and Mr. Pranab H. Das (Consultant, KPMG), focused on introducing students to Excel and data visualization techniques. The practical examples and real-world applications gave students a solid foundation in managing and interpreting data. Following a short break, the second session delved into descriptive analytics using Excel, where Ms. Pai and Mr. Das highlighted ways to analyze datasets effectively and produce meaningful insights through various Excel tools. Their interactive approach enabled students to engage with complex data in a structured manner, ensuring hands-on learning. Post-lunch, the third session concentrated on predictive analytics in Excel, where advanced forecasting techniques were discussed. The participants learned how to use Excel for making data-driven predictions, a valuable skill in today's data-centric world. The program concluded with closing remarks from dignitaries, who commended the students' enthusiasm and highlighted the importance of mastering data analytics. Overall, the event was a great success, providing students with the opportunity to develop essential skills and interact with professionals from KPMG. The hands-on learning experience enhanced their confidence in using Excel for academic research and practical business applications.
